Elda has got so much to see and do that one visit won't be enough. The town has countless museums - like the shoe museum - great heritage sites that will blow you away and traditional festivals that will immerse you in the Region of Valencia's history. A destination that keeps on giving. Overlooked by the La Silla del Cid mountain, Elda sits in a rich and fertile valley traversed by the river Vinalopó. The walking and cycling trails here will lead you to all sorts of fascinating areas. El Pantano, for instance, is home to two archaeological sites - Casa Colorá and El Canalón - which date to the Copper and Bronze Ages respectively. And that's not all. Monastil is an Iberian and Roman settlement and La Torreta dates to Medieval times. The incredible remains that were discovered at these sites have been collected at Museo Arqueológico Municipal, which is well worth a visit.

Another must-visit in Elda is the castle. Built in the 12th century by the Almohads, the fortress was a strategic spot for a number of civilisations and has borne witness to many historic events. The castle has no fewer than ten square towers and a number of historic remains have been found inside its curtain walls.

The history of the local shoe industry is another great reason to come and visit the town. So with all these sites to see, festivals to experience and dishes to try.
